Dear Readers,

Greetings!

Once again, I take this privilege to address you all through our E-Magazine ‘ZEN’.

My heartiest congratulations to all the students for their performance in the past session. I am sure each one of you must have learnt skills to be better human beings. As you embark on a new journey in the session 2018-19, I pray that you continue to persevere and push your boundaries to scale new heights.

We strongly believe in healthy home school partnership in bringing up a balanced human being. We began the academic year with our Parent Orientation programs for classes Sr.Kg to X and XII. These successful sessions with parents, where we had fruitful interactions and sharing, helped us in deciding certain changes needed to facilitate our children actualize their potentials.

Children, I hope you will utilize the summer holidays for a perfect break from school but not from learning. This time should be best utilized by reading books, taking up a sport or a creative hobby. Socialize with friends and family in real time rather than virtually. I am sure you will make the best of this month and a half and come back rejuvenated for another successful innings in school.

My best wishes to all the students awaiting the Board results.

“There will be obstacles, there will be doubts, there will be mistakes, But with Hard Work, there are no limits.”

God bless you!!!

Trip – Jambughodha

The students of Class 4 went to Jambughoda on 29th and 30th January, 2018. On the first day itself the students enjoyed various adventure activities like zip-line and double rope walking. In the evening they were taken to see Pithora Art. On the way back they enjoyed collecting wood for campfire. At night when the campfire was lit the students performed various skits, danced and sang.

On the next day after having breakfast they were taken for trekking in the Jambughoda Wildlife Sanctuary which is a home to a large population of many kinds of wildlife - the leopard, jackal, hyena, deer, sloth bear to name a few. They saw a termite hill and various trees like teak, mahua, bamboo. They enjoyed a few tranquil moments near the picturesque lake in the sanctuary.

On the way back home they visited Champaner which has been declared as the World Heritage Site by UNESCO. They also visited the Jami Masjid. They reached Ahmedabad after a memorable trip, having learnt about the lesser known Pithora Art, information about the termites and their nest-building, difference between a Wildlife Sanctuary and a National Park.

Anala Trip to Zainabad was held on 19th and 20th February

In all 77 students of Class 5 had enrolled for the trip.

The most important attraction of this trip was the desert safari. They saw the wild ass, cranes, black drongo, Luni (wild ass food). The sunset in the desert was unique. It was a great learning experience for the children.

Among the chirps of awaken birds and the grumble of the rubble, she lay still. Darkness. She was still as she could be. Only the blood within her veins and small rocks around her moved. She breathed cautiously, avoiding any movement. She blinked very less, even though she had not slept for two days. Her gaze was fixed a large metal ball lying motionless on a big rock. The fallen debris all around her did not seem to influence her right now, but the falling rocks near her and the giant ball did. Her heart skipped a beat every time a piece of rubble slid down to Earth. Life never seemed so slow.

Melinda was stuck under numerous rocks in a big crater. It seemed as if time had halted. She felt as if only moments ago, she was having her supper with Margo and her mother. She could still hear her younger sister giggling every now and then on their mother grunting about the cook and the horrid food. Melinda was among these hallucinations when a big chunk of rock fell on the Earth with a thump. It moved the giant metal ball slightly, but shook Melinda’s soul immensely. The metal ball seemed quite stable now as the rock had moved in front of it, stopping it. Mel thought this as her golden opportunity to swoop out of the debris crushing her.

After hours of wriggling and twisting, Mel finally managed to escape out the ruins, but the joy of relief persisted long enough for her to finally blink properly and see the world around her for the first time in days. Her throat dried. Darkness all around. She thought that the day had just begun!

Why was it getting dark already?

She limped forward, her legs searing with pain. Her body rebelled, but her soul scoffed and ordered to move forward. Mel walked for a couple of hours until her legs completely gave up and she fell on the floor with a thud.

Mind is one naughty part of our body. Of all times, it decided to play games right now. She saw double and heard nothing but a slow and steady hum coming from nowhere. Lights were growing bright and dim. She felt dizzy and poked on the ground. Suddenly she widened her eyes. Margo! She rose at length and gave out a frail call to her sister and her mother. Her voice was distorted and broken. It took her effort to speak loudly. But she gathered strength and shouted only once, “MARGO!” Right after her voice faded away, there was a sudden shake in another crater. “MEL?!”

Melinda was more than pleased on hearing Margo’s voice. Fearless. She hurried towards the sound and found her sister motionless, just as she was. There was another metal ball, smaller than what she saw earlier. The rocks kept on tumbling in the crater. Margo helplessly sobbing. Mel steadily lowered herself and slid down the slope and fell on the ground with a soft bump. Her pains were not there right now. All she could feel was the diminishing breaths of Margo. She tried to move the big rocks but her efforts were in vain. She sat down, tears rolling down uncontrollably. Her throat was dry but she turned to ask Margo how was she, but not everyone can bear loads for long. Mel could not help but weep. There was a surge of anger and sadness erupting within her.

She climbed out of the hole and stood on her weak legs. Dust and doom. Nothing more could be seen. Peaceful nights charred and morphed into nights of horrors in hell. Mel took some time to realise that there were metal balls of varying size everywhere. All with small flickering lights of red and green. Broken buildings, swirling dust and stirred up sky could not conceal the truth from the innocent soul. She realised that what had to be hers was no longer hers to command. She was at the mercy of those who believed that only fire brings purity. She was at the mercy of those who believed that to enlighten the world, they must first set it on fire.

She limped a bit forward where she saw a speck of white amongst all the brown and red. She staggered towards the blinding light amidst the darkness. She was completely exhausted and was dragging her feet, making her way between the rocks and rubble. The speck grew larger and brighter, making her askew. She was feeling a sudden gush of energy rise within her. Her thoughts were never so clear. The radiance was eternal. She never felt so contented. She felt as if her journey had finally come to a halt. Slowly, all the murk and dust started dissolving in the radiance from the speck. She extended her arm to reach out for the light when she suddenly heard a loud boom. And everything went black again.

LOOKING DOWN FROM THE WINDOW

Here I am, in a high-raised building,
With a pen in my right hand,
And sandwich in left.

Tired out from doing homework,
I sigh and keep my pen down;
And look down from the window.

I see the poor children playing in the sand;
Not a care of getting their homework done,
Not a care of getting their clothes dirty.

My envious eye keeps on staring them,
Until my mother passes by,
So I pretend to be studding.

After she leaves,
I continue my daydreaming,
Not showing my sympathy to whom I should.

Until I hear a pitiful voice,
It was my mother saying:
“How unlucky they are!
They get nothing you get,
Neither the fine pen,
Nor the vegetable sandwich;
Nor daily T.V.,
Nor weekly restaurants,
Or yearly schools;
They have to help their parents
To make the two ends meet;
Instead of studding in a cozy room.”

A stream of realisation
Flowed though my mind,
When I understood my selfishness;

Tears came to my eyes
When I saw the reality
My mother showed me

Falling

I’m green and bright and fresh
A new leaf among thousands more
And I know I will fall

I’m warmed by the light
The soil quenches my thirst
But I know, I’ll be alone once I fall

At times, the ground scares me
The mud and dirt are disgusting
And that is where I will fall and lay

I am working harder than I should
Trying to be noble and brave
Probably it might matter when I fall

I hate to think I’ll be useless
But it might console to think
That I do my best even when I fall

Though there is no point in asking,
I ask, “Why is fate like this?
Why do I have to fall?”

No, I won’t like that,
After all why to worry about an inevitable fall?
Fall I might and fall I will

I would rather fall with a crash
Then be on the whims of wind
Why prolong the painful fall?

Yes, it will hurt my weary veins
But it’s much better to hope
For there will be wending peace after the fall

If I turn to darkness,
It will make me sad
Better to face the sun when I fall

So, I make preparations for it
To make sure it won’t hurt
As I was warned by my friends

My fall’s near
I can feel it come
The wait finally ends

The sun is shining on my face
The wind is blowing on my back
This is my fall

It feels wonderful
To ride this roller coaster
I wonder why I feared it

This is a great thing
I was afraid before even feeling it
But now I do and I feel brave

I softly kiss the ground,
And close my eyes;
I can feel the peace now.

Whistleblower: The Murderer

A wonderful morning; I got up a bit late, yet managed to get ready for work in time. It was a peaceful day until I descended stairs, when I found my younger brother, Arthur Peterson, glued to TV news with very high volume.

“Charles Dog Training Camp has been sealed by the Court of London”, the news reporter announced.

For me, this was a shocking piece of news, as I believed it was a great training camp. My brother laughed and exclaimed, “This was bound to happen one day. Charles had given a bad review and expressed total disagreement about the latest research done by Professor Diana. I just hope she didn’t have to bribe the judge to get the camp and its illicit activities sealed.”

“Professor Diana - the one who lives next door? She is such a nice lady”, I protested. Arthur looked at his watch and said, “Check the time, you may reach late at work”. I hurriedly picked my coat and rushed for office. “Professor Diana- a nice lady? I guess so”, my mind kept wandering.

The day went well for me; I managed to escape warning for being late at work. Arthur too had a busy day with his university studies. At night though, Arthur confessed that something had been bothering him all day. He had a feeling that Professor Diana may get in some trouble that night. I consoled him not to worry and that he was rather stretching the morning news too far. While we disagreed on the subject, we both slept.

In the middle of the night, our doorbell rang and I went downstairs to open the door. The police had come to seek help of Arthur, who is reckoned one of the best teenaged detectives. I woke him up; they all sat down while I offered to serve them tea.

Arthur inquired, “What’s the matter, Inspector? Is it about Prof. Diana?”

“Indeed, Prof. Diana died; COD a slit throat. It seems Charles’ dog bit around her neck”, Inspector replied.

“I had a feeling that something would happen to her tonight. I have a pretty good clue that this must be a murder”, mourned Arthur, while I served the tea, which I think no one was interested in.

The Inspector continued, “Charles and his dog have been remanded to our custody. However, I am afraid, Charles has a strong alibi. The murder took place several blocks away from here and a security guard is an eyewitness to the crime.”

“Let’s rush to the crime-scene, Inspector” Arthur said.

I accompanied them to the crime-scene. Arthur examined the dead body, which was blood-stained and it was clear that she died due to slit on her neck. A message written in blood was found on the street which was presumably Diana’s last words, or say last number....21.

Arthur murmured, “21? What could this number mean? I must talk with the eyewitness security guard and hear his account.” He walked up to the guard and asked him, “Tell me what you saw.”

“I saw Charles and Professor Diana both walking across the street in opposite directions. The dog walking with Charles saw Diana and got crazy. He lashed out onto her and slit open her throat in a flash”, the eyewitness narrated.

Arthur probed, “Did you notice anything strange? Can you recall any such thing?”

“Not sure if this is strange, but Charles had his mouth covered with his hands just when his dog went berserk”, the security guard said.

We left with a feeling that there was no key to unlock this crime. The motive for Charles to kill Diana was clear, as she obstructed his training camp; there was however no proof against him. Upon Arthur’s instructions, I borrowed Diana’s research papers from the police. He read and re-read these, and kept on repeating, “Clue to solving this case must lie in her research itself.”

It was wee hours in the morning when Arthur announced, “I found it; now I need to find it”, and exited from our house. I accompanied him to the crime-scene, and on the way, we called up the Inspector informing him to reach there too.

Arthur approached the eyewitness and asked, “Did Charles touch anything after the incident?”

“As far as I know, he had not touched anything then and has since been in police custody”, he replied. By this time the Inspector too had arrived.

Arthur started looking around; on the streets, in garbage bins, here, there and everywhere. After a thorough search of one of the bins, he found a whistle inside and gestured the inspector to collect it as evidence.

“I know the murdered! It is Charles”, Arthur announced.

We were all startled as Charles had a strong alibi - an eyewitness who vouched that Charles was not even near Diana when she was killed by the Dog. How could he be the murderer?

Arthur explained, “His alibi is hollow. Remember security guard telling us about Charles covering his mouth before the Dog’s attack? At that time, he blew this whistle which instigated his dog to attack. Obviously, the Dog was well-trained to attack upon hearing a certain pattern of the whistle-blow.”

“But someone would have heard the whistle when it was blown”, I interrupted.

“This is not an ordinary whistle -this is Galton’s Whistle. Its frequency is higher than range audible to human beings i.e.20Hz to 20kHz. This means even if it was blown, no one would have heard it, except Dogs. We will find fingerprints of Charles on it. And, ‘21’ is the page number of her research work where information about this whistle is given. Case closed!” Arthur said.

Charles had no choice but to accept his crime. I wondered, “Why did Arthur read entire research, if he knew clues were on page 21?” I didn’t ask him but I guess his reply would have been, “Her work was damn interesting!”

My Sister

She was born when I was two
I never knew, who she was?
The day I became so big, it felt
Like the heaven’s most proud moment!

I love her like crazy, you see
When I am sad or I am in glee
I got jealous, a couple of days
‘Cause she was small, and got a graceful place

But when she grew up, like she is now
She just knows to yell, and to caw
My secret keeper and a friend of mine
(She still doesn’t know how to draw a line).

But I fight with her, and kiss her too,
Then too she doesn’t ask me, “How’re you?”
She is my sorrow, my regret
I love her more than anyone, I bet!

I wonder what her future holds,
She is growing up with cakes and moulds,
She wants a cake shop, ‘Candy Bliss’
But whatever she is, I love you, my cute lil’ sis!!

Return to my nest

As the sun sets
And another day comes to an end,
I see the birds returning to their nest
As soon as the darkness begins to cover the rest.

Why would they do that?
Why not face the darkness
Rather than running to the nest?
Cowardice in bird blood,
Can’t even face the night alone....

But then I realized the unexplained truth
That we humans bear the same booth,

When the gloom becomes prevalent
And staying in the darkness tends to our doom,
When the depression strikes up
And the loneliness strikes you out,
Do we not choose
To return to the nest,
Where we feel the warmth
And can let go of the rest?

So are we cowards?
Or in a constant search of warmth?
Are we homesick?
Or just want to find places where everything just clicks?

Is it necessary to be strong
And face the darkness alone,
Rather the setting your ego aside
And sharing your troubles with someone worth it all?

Guilty Conscience

PROLOGUE:
He lay motionless. Blood is still oozing out from his wounds but there is no sign evident on his face to showcase his pain. Thick crimson fluid is dripping from the shiny metal surface of my knife. I wipe it carefully with a napkin and stuff that blood soaked napkin back into my pocket along with my knife.

Before leaving I remark, “Everything pays back, sooner or later.” I glance at him one last time and leave that room.

MURDER. CONSPIRACY. SUSPECTS.

Police inspector, Ajit Ranade’s thoughts were captivated by these three words for past few days. He was in charge of 21 year old Lakshit Chauhan’s murder case. Lakshit Chauhan was the son of chief minister of Madhya Pradesh, Mr. Adhiran Chauhan. Lakshit’s murder had created waves of anxiety among the masses of Madhya Pradesh.

Inspector Ajit Ranade was perplexed by the facts of the case. Sitting in his cabin he tried to recall the major facts of the case. Lakshit’s dead body was found in his own room situated on the second floor of Chauhan Villa. “Lakshit was stabbed multiple times and he bled to death. His body was under the influence of high dose of alcohol while he was being murdered. The time of murder can be estimated from two a.m to four a.m in the morning” said Avinash Malhotra, the forensic expert. This information did not suffice to draw any conclusion regarding his murderer.

While Ajit was engrossed in his thoughts, enter Sahil Nair. “Sir, may I come in?” asked Sahil, sub inspector of police. Ajit greets his junior with a smile and takes the file from his hand. “Have a seat” ordered Ajit.

Ajit inquired from Sahil, “What’s your say in the case?”. Sahil replied, “Sir I believe murderer is right among the inmates of the house because the CCTV footage recorded no evidence of any intruder and the technical experts assure us that the footage is not tampered at all.”

“Hmm. Even I believe so.” Ajit remarked.

He took a pen and a notebook and listed down names of five suspects in total. Then he started analyzing the statements and conclude their possible motive of murder.

First in the list was Adhiran Chauhan and second was Vireesha Chauhan, Lakshit’s father and his mother respectively. Ajit spoke, “Both of them claim to be sleeping during the time of murder and they hadn’t heard any suspicious sound. What’s your opinion on this Sahil?”

“Sir I believe they are right. Lakshit’s cries wouldn’t be loud enough to reach his parents room on first floor. And for the motive of murder, I have heard Adhiran is an ambitious demagogue and there were rumors that he shared a rough relationship with his son as his son being a loafer spared no stone unturned to spoil his political image.”

“Possible. What about Vireesha, his mother?” said Ajit.

“I don’t find any significant motive for her.” Sahil said plainly.

Ajit nodded. He went further in his list and spoke, “Sahil I believe Ranjan Chauhan and Sneha Chauhan have really strong motive of murder against Lakshit. They would gain greater access to the ancestral property after Lakshit’s death. Plus they claim that they have heard nothing at all even though there room was just beside Lakshits’s room.”

“I agree sir. And what about Lakshit’s sister, Jigyasa?” Sahil asked impatiently.

“Frankly speaking I didn’t understand her reaction. She seemed uninfluenced by her brother’s death. She never bothered to shed a single tear.” Ajit said with a doubtful expression.

“Sir you can have a look at these set of pictures of crime scene. Maybe it will help.” Sahil said with hope.

Ajit took those pictures and started going through it with rapt attention. Suddenly a faint smile appeared on his face.

“Everything was perspicuous. How did we miss it? “ cried Ajit in jubilantly.

He dialed a number on his mobile and spoke in a composed manner, “I am Ajit Ranade. Can I have a word with you in Radiant Park? I have got a important lead.”

Completing his short conversation he started to leave. Sahil interrupted him and offered his company but Ajit refused and promised to update him later.

Ajit was waiting in the park patiently, sitting on a bench. After a while, Vireesha Chauhan arrives and sits beside him. Vireesha begins the conversation.

“So what’s the lead inspector?” Vireesha asked with hope.

“Why did you murder your son Mrs. Chauhan?” Ajit asked in a calm tone.

“Are you out of your mind?” Vireesha exclaimed.

“Mrs. Chauhan I saw a diamond stone lying near the dead body and a diamond stone is missing from your mangalsutra. Plus, we found your fingerprints on the weapon of murder which was lying in the backyard.” said Ajit.

“That’s not possible. Fingerprints cannot be present on the knife. I was wearing gloves while I was murdering him.” said Vireesha impatiently. The next moment she realized her mistake and tears rolled down from her eyes.

“So how did you kill him?”

“Firstly, I mixed sleeping pills in his uncle and aunt’s food so that they could not hear his cries. I used kitchen knife to murder him and as he was under influence of alcohol he could not protest much.” she confessed.

“Motive of murder?” Ajit asked.

“I had to choose between justice for my daughter Jigyasa who was raped by her own brother or my love for my son. I chose justice. It was not easy but this was the only way out. When I complained about Lakshit’s deed to his father he asked me to remain silent as he was concerned about his political image. I had to provide justice to my daughter myself.” Vireesha completed.

Ajit listened patiently and then he remarked, “You did the right thing. I won’t arrest you and for your punishment you will always carry your guilty conscience to remind you of your act” Then he left.

CHILDOOD

The days were golden and young.
I remember it was my childhood which was fun.
The days were long,
As my playing never stopped at all.
And the nights were short,
As my sleeps were not enough.

I had no studies so no need to pay attention,
But now my life is full of tension.
Whom to share,
Because now no one cares.
When I was young I loved to solve mysteries,
But now it is difficult to learn chemistry and history.

That time things were easy to ask,
But now I get only one reply 'Shut up'.
I was crazy at that time,
But now everybody says you are a lazy guy.
How to make them understand -
I was always like that.
It is not me who has changed,
But my duties have increased.
Still I will always dream of,
What?
My childhood.

TO BE WHAT YOU ARE

The courage to be what you are
To bare every scar
Is one quality that is rare
To heartily with everyone share
Your inner self, your true image
And not to lock it up in a cage

For those who hide
Have none by their side
Neither through the thick nor the thin
Just because of not letting others in
So jump above these obstacles
And let your voice be audible

And when you do
There may be a problem or two
But it will pass
And your life will be fresher than new-mown grass
That's why you must believe
Let your worries leave

It's a fresh beginning
A start of winning
Every goal, every dream
And raising your self esteem
Acceptance make you new
Makes you among the brave few

You are you, forever and ever
Accept it and you'll be sad never
Have the quality that is rare
To with everyone share
The courage to be what you are
To bare every scar.
